Colorado State University is charting the future of veterinary medicine by training the people who will care for animals for decades to come. For 140 years, they have led innovations in veterinary education, animal care, biomedical discovery, and public health.

And now, they plan to build a $230 million multifaceted Veterinary Health and Education Complex near the James L. Voss Veterinary Teaching Hospital on CSU's South Campus in Fort Collins, Colorado.

This project prepares us for the next century of compassionate care, advances in animal and human health, and excellent veterinary education, and it will transform the University's already world-renowned veterinary medical program to unparalleled excellence.

Groundbreaking soon.
